LEGITIMATE REPRISALS

While many hold civilized warfare to be a contradiction in terms, the present war is bringing out in relief the fact that there is such a thing as even military combatants being unwilling to descend to acts of total depravity. However, the temptation to abandon the restraints of civilization is admittedly great, when the other side has done so, and when such a policy, for the time being at least, seems to place the allies at a disadvantage, as regards the efficiency of their campaign.

To be sure barbarity and defiance of international conventions, it is expected, will lose the enemy the moral support of the world. But substantially the whole of the rest of the world is already aligned on the two sides. The allies seem indisposed to reciprocate, in kind, as regards airplane raids upon unprotected cities and civilian population. If that determination is adhered to—especially as they propose to specialize along this line of the service—it is obvious they will be materially hampered thereby, and such a course, it is conceivable, might be a dominating factor in determining the result.

Certain countries, like Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland though nominally neutral, to all intents and purposes are said to be sympathetic with the central powers. That being the case if, as was charged, the enemy was accustomed to appropriate to their own use the supplies donated by this country to the Belgians and their other victims, it would seem to be nothing but fair play to cut off our exports of wheat and food-stuffs to these so-called neutrals.

The effect of this would be that they would have to keep at home for their own sustenance, the butter, cheese and other products which they are now sending to the other side, thereby, so far as practical results are concerned, leaving themselves with the enemy.

If this be true, it would seem to be doubly unjust to let our cereals and other vital necessities go to such neutrals, rather than, in exchange for her sugar and tobacco, to such of our confessed and unequivocal allies, as Cuba.—O. N. P.

Haying has begun with the most of the farmers. The wheat looks fine at present. This surely has been a lane Fourth. Hardly a fire cracker could be heard. It is hoped we do not go too far the other way and forget the meaning of the day.

The S. S. Haverford of the American line met a submarine the other day and went down. It brings to our mind that we were passengers on board this same boat sixteen years ago next September. We had been spending the summer in England and like a number of other tourists did not have a return ticket. When ready to come home we could not find passage, and this boat which was new then, was manned to carry the extra passengers. The crew was picked from most everything and knew nothing about the drill that is a part of every well equipped boat. This caused considerable trouble and the passage was slow. A party of cricket players were coming over to Philadelphia to play an American team and in order to get here on time they went into the engine room and shoveled coal. We were two weeks crossing. When the pilot came aboard the first thing he told was the shooting of Pres. McKinley. We cannot describe the awful hush that went over our company. We could hardly believe we had been gone from the world of things so long. It seems such a short time, but what a wonderful change has taken place in the sixteen years that are passed. The Haverford seemed an immense boat at that time but today probably would be small. We arrived in New York on the 18th day of September. Never did the "new paint" of our own land smell better than then. The beauties of the old world will ever remain with us but the freedom of our own land will always be stronger by the contrast.

A PATRIOTIC CREED

To serve my country day by day
At my humble post I may;
To honor and respect her flag,
To live the traits of which I brag;
To be American in deed
As well as in my printed creed;
To stand for truth and honest toil,
To till my little patch of soil
And keep in mind the debt I owe
To them who died that I might know
My country, prosperous and free,
And passed this heritage to me.
I must always in trouble's hour
Be guided by the men in power;
For God and country I must live,
My best for God and country give,
No act of mine that men may scan
Must shame the name American.
To do my best and play my part,
American in mind and heart;
To serve the flag and bravely stand,
To guard the glory of my land;
To be American in deed,
God grant me strength to keep this creed. Edgar A. Guest.

It shows a great highway improvement costing over $1,500,000 now under way, direct from the heart of Akron to HIGHBRIDGE PARK.

Starting from N. Main St., Akron—first comes the mammoth North Hill Viaduct then the North Howard St. brick pavement extension to the New High Level Bridge (198 feet above the Cuyahoga River) then an 18-foot brick paved road on into the city of Cleveland.

The most gigantic scheme of highway improvements ever put into actual work by the city of Akron.

High Bridge Park gets the full benefit.
